

Irish Studies in International Affairs – International Security Policy

Irish Studies in International Affairs has been published since 1979 as the leading Irish-based, peer-reviewed, journal in the discipline, with an increasing international reputation and circulation. Each issue includes contributions on a special theme and other original articles related to Ireland and international affairs broadly defined, to include issues such as development aid, conflict resolution, trade and human rights.

Several contributions to the journal have examined the significant and ever-evolving issue of international security policy from various perspectives. The list below includes links to a selection of articles on the topic.
